

United in values: The concert organized by the Police goes on Rai 1

After words, images and presentations, now it's time for action, or better, for music.

The 6th edition of the Concert for Legality organized by the Polizia di Stato will be broadcast on RAI 1 on April 23, at 2:00 p.m.

Under the slogan "United in Values" a bunch of police friends performed on stage at Rome Gran Teatro: from the idols of the young as Emma, Virginio, Modà, Zero Assoluto, Raphel Gualazzi, to authentic giants of Italian music as Roberto Vecchioni. Many live performances were accompanied by the Police Band.

There were also moments dedicated to reflection, with the participation of Luca Argentero and Raoul Bova, and moments devoted to laughter with the Oblivion and Baz.

The host of the event Paola Saluzzi liaised the artists on stage with an audience of more than 3,000 young people from all over Italy.

Love, respect, sincerity, courage, and friendship: these are the values celebrated by the artists on stage, each according to their own feelings.

The concert was an opportunity for having fun but also a moment for reflection offered to young people through their favourite communication channels: music and entertainment.

The event was supported free by major partners who helped spread the police message of legality: the MSN site hosted and important space in its news channel; the web portals Yahoo and Virgilio launched and promoted the initiative as well as Radio Dimensione Suono radio station.

The students of Rome "Roberto Rossellini" Institute for Film and Television made some pictures and interviews, thus experiencing the activities relating to their future profession for the first time.

A special thank goes to all the artists and famous guests who participated in the event, for free.
